

Eric Miller named CenturyLink vice president/general manager for expanded North Florida market

Tallahassee, Fla. — CenturyLink (NYSE: CTL) has named Eric Miller as the company's vice president/general manager for the expanded North Florida region, which will now include the company's local territory in 17 north central and northern counties. This includes areas in Marion, Citrus, Sumter, Lake and Levy counties northward through Leon and over to Okaloosa.

Miller, who is located in Tallahassee, has end to end responsibility for developing a localized approach to the market, including product offerings and promotions. He is responsible for revenue; the customer experience; the local installation and repair technicians; customer metrics; area retail stores and door-to-door sales; community and public relations; and brand representation.

Prior to moving into this position, Miller served as the vice president/general manager for CenturyLink's Alabama operations along with the Tallahassee, Florida area. In total, Miller has over 12 years experience in the communications industry, which includes experience with Sprint Communications in Operations, Marketing, Sales, IT and Network.

"Working with our local communities to identify underserved areas and continuing to emphasize excellent service and relevant products, will be my immediate focus," said Miller. "I am pleased to be leading these efforts across the northern part of the state."

Miller earned both an MBA and a bachelor's degree from the University of Kansas. He is married to Lisa Miller and has two children.

CenturyLink is committed to enabling consumers, businesses and communities to better connect, live and work through advanced technologies and solutions delivered with honest and personal service. The company remains committed to supporting its communities not only through the services it provides, but through community involvement and employee volunteerism.
